THE OVERRIDE

The Hidden Code Running Your Life
& How to Rewrite It

Break the pattern. Choose your life.

A short, practical guide to seeing the pattern while it's running, creating a pause, and choosing a different response.

THE MODEL

One Pattern. Two Paths.

You are not your patterns. You are the one running them. Most of life runs on autopilot — the same trigger producing the same outcome, again and again. The Override is the one move that changes the path.

THE OLD PATH — RUNNING ON AUTOPILOT

THE NEW PATH — THE OVERRIDE

THE KEY INSIGHT

The trigger didn't cause the outcome. The story did — and the story was written a long time ago. The pause is where you catch it. The override is where you choose differently.

SELF-ASSESSMENT

Which One Are You?

Eight patterns. Each one made sense once — it was protecting something. Most people are running at least one, usually without ever naming it. Read each tell and check the ones that feel like you. Then circle your top one or two.

- ☐ The Achiever
Doing everything right and feeling dead inside. Outruns the emptiness with more — but the goal post keeps moving.
- ☐ The Peacekeeper
Never says what she needs. Years of swallowed words have built a quiet wall of resentment.
- ☐ The Fixer
Solves everyone's problem so he never has to sit with his own. Feels most alive when needed.
- ☐ The Avoider
Doesn't start what she might not finish. Lives in a permanent state of 'almost.'
- ☐ The Perfectionist
Standards impossible by design. If the bar can't be cleared, he can never truly fail — just 'not yet.'
- ☐ The Pleaser
Learned love is conditional. Shapeshifts to be whoever's wanted — and lost track of what she wants.
- ☐ The Controller
Doesn't trust it'll go well unless he manages every variable. Control is the only safety he's known.
- ☐ The Drifter
Likable, capable, and in the same place for years. Goes along with things. Disconnection as flexibility.

YOUR FIRST TOOL

The 10-Second Pause

Between what happens to you and what you do next, there is a space. For most people running automatic patterns, that space is a fraction of a second — the pattern fires before there's any awareness it was coming. The work is to widen that space until there's room for a choice. Start here.

1

Notice the cue

Learn the physical signal that your pattern is about to fire — a tight chest, a held breath, a clenched jaw, a flush of heat. The body knows before the mind does.

2

Do nothing for ten seconds

When you feel it, don't respond. Don't send the text, say the thing, or take the action. Just breathe — slow out-breaths. Ten seconds. That's the whole drill.

3

Ask one question

In the space you just made, ask: 'Is this a fact, or a story?' Then choose your response from there — not from the pattern.

TRY IT THIS WEEK

Pick one recurring trigger — a certain email, a certain person, a certain time of day. For one week, run the 10-second pause every time it shows up. Notice what changes.

THIS IS THE FIRST MOVE

The book goes deeper.

This guide gives you the model and the first tool. The Override — the book — walks the whole path: how patterns get written, what they're protecting, how to build the pause, execute the override, and make a new response your default.
